ENVIRONMENT POLICY

Independent Safety Services Ltd was formed in 1996 to provide waste management, dangerous goods and health & safety consultancy services, with a particular focus on transportation safety and healthcare waste. ISSL's services are carried out in accordance with all current and relevant environmental legislation and other relevant industry good practice guidance requirements. Legal compliance is a core requirement of ISSL's environmental management system which is certified to ISO14001:2015.

The organisation, including its management and stakeholders, is aware of the potential impacts its business activities could have on the environment. It is also aware of the impacts that environmental change may have on its services and development, therefore it is committed to minimising these impacts where possible and striving for continual environmental improvement.

Environmental improvement is achieved through:

- effective use of raw materials and energy;
- contributing to the prevention of pollution, resource depletion and climate change;
- minimising waste production where practicable;
- raising the level of employee environmental awareness through appropriate environmental awareness training;
- minimising our travel and transport impacts when visiting clients by using public transport and car sharing where practicable for consultant travel;
- reducing the need for travel for office based tasks that can be carried out nearer to home by utilising email, telephone and teleconferencing; and
- the use of technology (internet, email, virtual networks etc) where possible to reduce printing and paperwork storage impacts.

Environmental improvement is achieved through the setting of specific objectives and targets that are regularly monitored and subject to periodic internal and external auditing through the application of ISO14001:2015.
